Cascade Chrysanthemums

Festival October 15th—November 30th

IT IS with a great deal of pride that we invite you to enjoy our large and varied selection of Cascade Chrysanthemums. In addition to the simpler types, we have added our new quilled and tufted sorts in a wide range of colors, including the gorgeous "Falls of Sahalie," a true Indian red, and "Venetia," a rich, deep red. There are soft lilacs, pinks, yellows, bronzes, many two-tones and, of course, the exquisite whites, "Autumn Lace," "Tranquility"--and many others. In direct contrast to the upright and stiff habit of the conventional Chrysanthemums, the Cascades trail in a flowing mass of soft or brilliant colorings for a length of from four to eleven feet from the rim of the flower pot, making one of the loveliest and most unique floral displays imaginable.

While they leave nothing to be desired for use in the patio or garden, they are particularly distinctive as a house plant. Placed on the mantel shelf or pedestal, these starry flowers make a gay contribution for a month or six weeks of bloom. The type was discovered in Japan growing wild in a remote mountain area, trailing over the rocks.

CULTURE

Preferably keep in a semi-shady location; cut back stems in February and, from the new growth, select two or more runners, according to age of plant, and keep the remaining shoots trimmed back. Then train and tie these leaders on bamboo stakes or wires, pointing North, and slanting up at an angle of 45°, so that sun strikes all parts equally. Disbud and pinch back the side shoots to one or two leaf joints to develop a bushy, close-branched side growth. About the end of September remove supports and let runners droop over side of pot, facing South to the sun. Plant in a mixture of good loam and leafmold, and during growing season (March-September) feed lightly with a commercial fertilizer (5-10-2). The resulting cascade of color will amply reward you.
